The reported agreement grew out of quiet negotiations involving U.S., Israeli and Egyptian officials, as well as representatives from at least two U.S. oil companies during the Camp-David summit confer-

There was speculation, however, that difficulties arose over Israel's reported rejection of a reported Egyptian proposal to reopen a peace treaty for review automatically after five years. The Washington Post, in a dispatch from Jerusalem today, quoted Israeli government sources as saying that Prime Minister Menachem Begin had instructed his negotiators in Washington that such a provision was not a negotiable issue so far as Israel was concerned.

Eternal Treaties

According to these sources, Post correspondent William Claiborne reported, Mr. Begin's instructions were that a peace treaty by defini-tion should be eternal, and that if either side wants to renegotiate any aspect of it later, that can be done by mutual consent.

Although Israel's Foreign Ministry formally denied any knowledge of an Egyptian intent to put a limit on the duration of the treaty, The Post reported, government sources d that the Callo delegation had diate confrontation with South Af indicated that it wanted Egypt to rica despite the failure of the Westbe able to review the pact after five ern trations to win agreement in years.

Israeli diplomatic sources, the Jerusalem dispatch said, saw the reported Egyptian request as an effort to show other Arab states that punitive UN action — which could occur as early as Monday and could force the West to choose the treaty with Israel is not neces-sarily irreversible, should conditions change in the future.

In remarks to Mr. Carter at today's luncheon - carefully spoken within earshot of newsmen and television crews before the doors were closed - Mr. Dayan apparently was suggesting that some dif-ficulty in the negotiations would need more discussion between Mr. Carter and Egyptian President Anwar Sadai and Mr. Begin.

Two days ago, Mr. Carter also stepped personally into the negotiating process here - meeting separately with both delegations - and after seeing the president, the Israe-li foreign minister spoke of a "problem" that had developed. The president as well as White House and State Department spokesmen

But December Vote Still On

South Africa Will Resume Namibia Parleys With UN

By John F. Burns

PRETORIA, South Africa, Oct. 19 (NYT) — The South African government agreed today to resume negotiations with the United Nations for a UN-supervised transition to black majority rule in South-West Africa (Namibia), but attached conditions that could that the United South-West Africa (Namibia) abort the UN plan and lead to the establishment of a South African-sponsored regime in the territory. At the urging of top officials from five Western nations, Pretoria has agreed that the UN special representative for the territory, Martti Ahtisaari of Finland, should return to South-West Africa as soon as possible for negotiations with the South African administrator-general there, Marthinus Steyn. However, Prime Minister Pieter

Hostility to SWAPO

An additional cause for caution was Mr. Botha's evident hostility toward the South-West Africa People's Organization, whose agreement to stop fighting and compete in elections is crucial to the UN accord. In a preamble to his announcement today, the prime minister implied that the nationalist group would bring ruin to the ternion.

Lust month, Mr. Botha vowed that South Africa would never let the group take power in the territory. Today, he made no mention of the group by name, but his reference was clear. Division May Have Helped Elect Non-Italian

Split Among Italian Cardinals Seen in Vote for Pope were cast for the 57-year-old arch-rooms of the secluded conclave come near the prescribed majority

By Paul Hofmann

ROME, Oct. 19 (NYT) - The mysteries of the conclave that led to the surprise election of Pope Iohn Paul II on Monday night are still impenetrable, but there are sure indications that a deep and bitter split among the Italian cardinals helped give the Roman Catholic Chables Statement Lelian lic Church its first non-Italian head in 455 years.

Various participants in the con-ciave, which began Saturday night, have stated publicly during the last few days that the papal election started with a general search for an Italian candidate, but that no consensus was reached.

The archbishop of Genoa, Cardinal Giuseppe Sin, who is known to be critical of the reforms envisaged by the Second Vatican Ecumenical Council in 1962-65, was proposed as successor to the late Pope John Paul I by a group of Italian and non-Italian conservatives. He is said to have received about 35 votes during the first ballots on Church officials who have known the pontiff say that they regarded him as a strong-willed man with great potential leadership qualities. But they added that they do not yet know in which direction he intends to lead.

Some saw him as a pragmatist who would seek to expand the coexistence of the church and atheist regimes around the world. Others described him as a fighter who would take a tough stand.

There was agreement on only one point - that by virtue of his experience and personality he would not be able to avoid the issue, but would have to deal with it personally and directly.

Intentions Unclear

In his first statement, Pope John Paul II was careful not to signal his intentions. But the questions were implicit in the text.

He sent his greetings to the citizens and priests of Poland and said that the greetings were an "inextricable mixture of memories, affection, nostalgia and hope."

The innocuous statement immediately was seized upon by the commentators. What was the "hope" that the pontiff had in mind? Did he intend to make a solemn papal visit to Poland, the first of its kind to a Communist European country? Pope Paul VI had

The archbishop of Vienna, Cardinal Franz Konig, and the archbishop of Barcelona, Cardinal Narciso Jubany Arnau, are widely credited with nominating the archbishop of Cracow, Cardinal

rom northern Italy who had radiimpact. Mr. Gierek visited Pope Paul a year ago, and the Polish am-bassador to Rome yesterday point-ed proudly to that event as a sign of improved relations between his government and the church.

Vital Issue

One of the political issues that the pope must face is of vital importance to the church in Latin America.

Bishops from all over Latin merica were due to meet in Puebla. Mexico, this week to discuss and possibly soft-pedal a "progressive" policy statement that they had adopted at a similar conference 10 years ago, when they called on the Catholic church to side with the Latin American poor and dispossessed against oppression.

The Puebla meeting had to be postponed because of the death of John Paul I, who was reported to be favorable to those who regarded the "liberation" statement as too Marxist and wanted to see it toned down. The pope, specialists said yesterday, must step in and decide whether the Vatican wants to play the "progressive" or the "conservative" card in Latin America.

The pontiff is regarded as a "progressive" on social questions. Italian politics inevitably will be sharply changed by the election of the first non-Italian pope in more than 450 years.

Political Contacts

Italian popes had close personal contacts with Italian politicians. Pope Paul VI, for instance, was a personal friend of Aldo Moro, the slain premier, and intervened in his behalf with the Red Brigades. When a young boy was kidnapped in Sardinia, there was a papal prayer for his release.

Comparable events in other parts of the world received no such attention from the Holy Sec.

Now, as commentators pointed out yesterday, the church will be more universal and less parochially Italian-oriented.

The Christian Democrats, who are the Catholic party of Italy and who have been ruling the country for 30 years, "must hurry up and become a nonclerical party," leftist newspaper La Republica wrote yesterday. Whether the aloofness of the church from the Italian scene will work against the "historic compromise" between Italian Catholics and Communists or hasten it, cannot be predicted.

EEC Demands Change in U.K. Fishing Policy

BRUSSELS, Oct. 19 (AP) - The European Community Commission has formally called on the British government to bring its fishing policy into line with European Economic Community rules, with the prospect of commission action in the European Court of Justice if Britain fails to do so. Britain fails to do so.

A spokesman said today that the commission will submit its request to Britain within days. Other com-munity sources said that a British response would be demanded within weeks.

Among the aspects of British fishing policy that are considered unacceptable, according to the spokesman, are the closing of a northeast Ireland herring fishing zone and of Isle of Man herring fishing the statement of the consideration of the constant of fishing, the introduction of a minimum 70-millimeter net mesh for scampi fishing and the extension of the zone where fishing of Norway pout is forbidden.

The Associated Press reported, meanwhile, that informed sources said the Israelis are asking the United States for a large new aid program to finance the Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai. According to these sources, AP said, Israeli estimates of the cost of the pullout have risen sharply since the Camp David summit last month. At that conference, Israel agreed to return the Sinai to Egypt, and this is a principal factor in the peace treaty now being negotiated. The Carter administration, it was reported, so far remains noncommittal on that aid request, although it has already agreed to pay for two air bases in the Negev Descri to replace Israeli air bases in the Sinai.

$100 Million

Some Pentagon sources reportedly have been speaking of the air base price tag as around $100 million each, although Israeli estimates have ranged far higher. The admin-istration has said the exact figure must be negotiated. The Associated Press said the additional aid that Israel was requesting would offset the costs of relocating settlers in the Sinai, who would be open to eviction by the Egyptians, as well as the new bases for Israeli troops being withdrawn.

President Carter's luncheon meeting today with the two delegations was officially in the nature of a progress-report session. The White House described it as part of the president's effort "to review with the delegations the status of the talks, including the progress made and the issues remaining." Reporters interpreted Mr. Dayan's overheard remarks today

Overall Settlement

Another point of difficulty is the question of linking an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty with an overall Middle East peace settlement. It was understood that efforts were being made to embody that link in a preamble to the treaty. Egyptians regard the other issues as connected in a much greater degree than dn the Israelis.

The United States contends that although there is no specific lan-guage requiring a link between an israeli-Egyptian treaty and an overall settlement, the political situa-tion necessitates such a link.

Considering the stakes involved. it seemed probable to observers bere that President Carter will be in contact with both Mr. Sadat and Mr. Begin, should speculation about the difficulties be correct.

Earlier today, the Egyptian and Israeli delegations met alone, without a U.S. mediator, in an unusual hilateral session at the Madison Hotel here, where both delegations "To sum up," Mr. Duncan told the association, "I see no grounds for believing that today we are any worse off militarily than we were five years ago. We were No. 1 (where it counts) five years ago; we are still No. I today." Navy Secretary Claytor,

Mediterranean Victory

The U.S. Navy in a war could bottle up most of the Soviet fleet before it could get to sea, Mr. Clay-tor said, and quickly sink the Soviet ships in the Mediterranean.

Describing the various Soviet fleets and their geographic disad-vantages, Mr. Claytor said, "The Soviet Baltic fleet can be bottled up in the event of hostilities by mining the Danish Straits. The Soviet Black Sea fleet can be bottled up by mining the Turkish straits. West Asks UN to Delay Sanctions on S. Africa

(Continued from Page 1) mise that was achieved came only after an exercise in extreme brinksmanship by the South Africans, U.S. officials disclosed later. When Mr. Vance and his counterparts from Britain, Canada, West Germany and France prepared yesterday to leave the government seat at the Union Buildings in Pretoria, they were convinced that the South Africans had chosen to announce publicly that the talks had ended in failure.

An open break was one of three options that were left for final consideration by the South African Cabinet. Another was the joint communique, which represented a compromise between Pretoria's opening demand for an endorsement of the December elections and the West's demands for guarantees from South Africa that those elections, if held, would be treated as nothing more than a test of public opinion.

Limited Compromise

In saying goodbye, however, Foreign Minister R.F. Botha suddenly began a lengthy discussion with Mr. Vance on the limited-compromise proposal. U.S. officials feel that this led to the South African decision to agree in the communique to a new round of talks with a special representative of UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim over South-West Africa.

This agreement was coupled to an appeal by the five nations to Mr. Waldheim to send his representarive, Martti Ahtisaari, to the provincial South-West African capital of Windboek as soon as possible to open new talks with South-West Africa's administrator-general, Martinhus Steyn, on fixing a date for bringing UN troops into the territory and for elections that the United Nations will agree to supervise.

Mr. Waldheim is due to report Monday to the Security Council on results of the 16-month negotiations between the five-nation contact group and Pretoria. A report of total deadlock on South-West Africa was widely expected to trigger demands from African states for trade embargoes against South Africa that would have posed threats both to Britain's economy and to the Carter administration's dip matic campaign to win over bia African nations.

The failure of the talks to pro duce a clear-cut result left di South African and the five del tions free to interpret the point covered in the communique is widely differing ways. News again cies reported that the British, Wei Germans and South Africans out licly hailed the results as a maid success, while Mr. Vance was much life it more restrained in his description of the communique, which be noted contained sharp differences in views on the election issue.

The communique and two units [17]? sides at the same time establish new sequence of decision-making points for all those involved in the complex, decade-long effort to re solve a crisis sparked by low-leve but escalating insurgency against South African administration de elared illegal by the Uniter

Mr. Vance said that the five na tions would be in immediate contact with African atates that support the guerrillas of the South West African People'
Organization (SWAPO) to urg them to "let the process we are re commending go forward." If this first step is successful, a confronta: tion next week in the Security. Council could be headed off and Mr. Waldheim would dispatch Mr

Ahtisaari for new talks.
U.S. officials said today tha those talks would then provide a fi nal measure of whether South Africa | 14 with an internal settlement that would risk continuing the guerily,], I it was and international sanctions, o would move back to supporting at " internationally recognized solution even if it means giving SWAPO 4chance to win power eventually.

Mr. Vance indicated that strenous efforts by the five nations this week to get Prime Minister Boths to cancel the December elections had failed. The communique reports Pretoria's view that the elections will go ahead as an internal process to elect leaders, while the... five counter with an assertion that... they will consider the unilateration vote null and void.

NEW YORK, Dec. 29 (NYT) -Newly released recordings of Maria Callas have dominated the classical record world in 1978, Callas died just over a year ago and last visited a recording studio in 1969, yet suddenly a flood of complete operas and recitals featuring her has appeared on a variety of labels.

Angel's "The Unreleased Recordings," contains six arias taped between 1955 and 1969 that the soprano never approved for re-lease (the reason is obvious) in ali-but two beautifully shaped scenes from "La Sonnambula," Callas is fearly struggling).

Having a (Trivia) Ball

ONDON (IHT) — It's party time again and this year even the Chelsea Arts Ball has been revived. Guests are to wear feathers or fur and although they will undoubtedly be as merry as grigs (a word that is perhaps not coincidentally derived from the Norwegian krek, or crawling creature), one almost knows that they can never match

• In 1937 Cecil Beaton and Sir Michael Duff were co-hosts at a fantastic party at Ashcombe, Beaton's house near Salisbury. Guesis were asked to come as peasants.

milkmaids and shepherdesses. A dozen bleating sheep were penned in front of the house and hired urchins chased a goal with mag-nesium flares. The only person in ordinary evening dress was Mr. Sacheverell Sitwell

 One year earlier Lady Cupard gave a dinner party at her house in Groberor Square, which was exended by the king. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson, Winsson Churchill and others. During the course of the evening, Mr. Simp-son used a gadget attached to his key-chain to open a bottle of Vicby water for

As she arrived, Lady Diana Cooper, in a pearl-festooned silver concoction, had some water thrown at her. Later, a long red ostrich feather headdress worn by Mr. John Russell, first secretary of the Brit-

• At the Bachelors' Ball in 1953, attended by 84 of London's most eligible bachelors, 23-year-old Lord Carnegie declared: "I prefer cars to women. You don't get caught on the sequins."

o In 1959 the New Year was welcomed with a party given by the vivacious Mrs. Bunty Kinsman in her home in Milner Street, Chelsea. The theme of the party was the Vie de Boheme. Mrs. Kinsman was attired as a Salvador Dali painting and her Lloyds underwriter husband was dressed as the Eiffel Tower by Moonlight, Duncan Sandys, minister of defense, wore a painter's

● The most mind-boggling party of all took place in 1941. In the middle of June reports came from Palm Beach that vivacious Eisa Maxwell has staged a "Bitta" party to raise money for British war charities. Guests were asked to come in dressing-gowns, siren suits or their oldest clothes and a large tent was scattered with fake debris front which dummy figures were extricated and carried off on stretchers. These events are from a book called "Gossip 1920-1070," a deadpen chroni-cle of the less significant events of half a century compiled by Old Harrovi-an Andrew Barrow, 33, who is not a gossio columnist and has never appeared in a column although he was listed in the Court Circular of the Times, which is rather bet-. Se was a page at despite its high price and careful. Talky, A columnist states: a devoted two observed two observed two observed training and careful.

> generous excerpts. Although concerned with English events, the book will be published in 1979 in the United States and Mr. Barrow's agent has sold tea-towel rights in the United States to the book's interesting endnapers, a sort of genealogical chart showing how everyone is related to everyone else. "There is such a continuum in London," Mr. Barrow says.

> "It's tittle-tattle, relaxing. Someone said this book makes no strain on the mind. which I think was not meant as a compliment but I took it as one. I like everyone in the book. One reviewer said I sneer, I certainly don't. Sometimes I was almost crying because of the way people survived: their durability is so touching.
> "If you read it carefully, there are lots of > patterns in it, titere is a sort of rhythm, I'd like a reviewer to say it's an extremely weird book — the selection of details, the rhythm. the leaving of people in the air."

> Weird it is indeed, with such characters as Unity Mutford going to parties with her pet grass snake, Enid, slung around her neck, the Begum Aga Khan declaring during an interval of "Rigoletto" at Coveot Garden in 1938 that Hitler was the most attractive man she had ever met, and the strapping Col. Barker who turned out to be a woman. 'This is terrible," said the colonel's motherin-law, "My daughter nearly fainted when Item from 1920: On March 23, the vicar, of All Saints, Cheltenham, was preaching by candlelight when the horrified faces of his congregation drew his attention to the fact that his surplice was on fire. There are fleeting headliners such as Christine Keeler, and there is the durable Lady Diana Cooper who is followed from her days as an actress in "The Miracle" through to an incident in 1968 when she receives apologies from the deputy commissioner of the Metropolitan Police after a midnight raid by policemen seeking can-nabis in a hatbox. There are so many entries for Cecil Beaton that the TLS reviewer suggested Mr. Barrow was obsessed by him.

"I interviewed Cecil Beaton by telephone once on what makes a good letter," Mr. Barrow said. " 'The smallest details, the minutia are always interesting," he said."

'Completely Trivial'

Mr. Barrow agrees. "I am completely trivial. I have never been able to draw conclusions." He has just written an article for Harpers and Queen on private dances and is writing one on nicknaraes. He has found two Bubbles and two people named Sunny so far. He wrote for The Observer for a while: A piece on nutterfly farms and an investigative piece on dandruff, "It took four or five days hard research, No one knows what causes it."

He says he is more interested in what a statesman had for lunch than in what he says. He is ruther pleased to have learned from the Evening Standard's Diary page what Neville Chamberlain ate on the aircraft that carried him to Berchtesgaden on Sept. 15, 1938 (whisky and sandwiches going there, chicken and claret coming

Trivia in such quantity can be so hypnotic as to seem to have meaning. "Someone said that £10 [the price of the hook] is too much to pay to learn that Lady Pamela Hicks won three bars of soap at a tombola," Mr. Barrow says, "I think it's marvelous, Three bars of soap: that's just the point."

Queen's Honors List PEOPLE: Has 685 Recipionts

Queen Elizabeth 213 created for new life peers. 21 knights and made soprano Joan Sutherland and single-handed sailor Naomi James dames of the British Empire Sincer Olivia Newton-John and telephanan-novelist James Herriot were on the laurels list 100. Each was awarded the Order of the British Empire medal for outstanding work in their respective fields. Twice a year the queen hands out utles and awards to loyal subjects nominated by the orime minister. This New Year's Honors List named 685 recipients. A life peer-age went to Sir Bernard Miles, founder of London's Mermaid the ater. He is only the second actor to be made a lord — the first is Lord (Laurence) Olivier. Another peer's title, beld for life and not passed on to descendants, went to Hugh Scanlon, former president of one of the country's most powerful trade unions. In general, however, it was a routine list, filled with people hardly known nationally let alone worldwide. One exception was Gracie Fields, the far-famed entertainer, who was given the title "Dame." the female equivalent of a knightbood. Artist Ruskin Spear, actors Donald Sinden and Gordon Jack-son (of "Upstairs, Downstairs"). James Cameron and 10 other journalists, theater designer John Bury. former pop singer Tommy Steele and policemen, firemen and civil servants received other awards. One new knight was orcbestral conductor Charles Mackerras. Allan Clark, former groundskeeper at Ayr race course, received his Britisb Empire Medal for services "to racing generally." William Stevens was bonored not only for 19 years of selling tickets on the London subway system, but for tackling a man armed with a sawed-off sbotgun who was trying to snatch a subway payroll.

The runnersup included a highjumper, a gymnast and a swimmer, but the Soviet Sportsman of the Year award went to someone who neither leaped nor dived. World chess champion Anatoly Karpov won the award in the annu-al poll of the Federation of Soviet Sports Journalists. Karpov, who defended his title in the Philippines against Soviet defector Viktor Korchnoi, also was personally honored by President Leonid Brezhnev with the Order of the Red Banner of Labor. Second in the sportwriters' list was highjumper Vladimir Yashchenko, who set indoor and outdoor world records this year, followed by gymnast Nikolai Andri-anov, i englumper VIIgelmina Bardausii ne, swimmer Vladimir Samilian and promise to Mukain.

In Bid to End Guerrilla War by Polisario

Mauritania Role Held Weakened in Western Sahara

Since seizing power in July, a junta of officers headed by Lt. Col. Mustapha Ould Mohammed Salek has proclaimed its desire to end the rt war, which began after Mauritania and Morocco annexed the vast phosphate-rich territory from Spain in late 1975. The Algerian-backed Polisario Front, struggling for the independence of the Sahara, had singled out Mauritania, the "weak link," for its hit-and-run at-tacks and has nearly ruined the fragile mining-based economy of the former French colony.

Two days after the July 10 coup, the Polisario unilaterally proclaimed a cease-fire on the Mauritanian "front" while continuing its attacks against the Moroccan-held zone of the Western Sahara. And from Sept. 9 to Sept. 14, Polisario and Mauritanian representatives beld secret talks in Paris, apparently with official French blessing, in search of a peaceful solution to the

'Unacceptable' Proposals

But Hakim Ibrahim, "foreign minister" of the Polisario's socalled Saharan Democratic Arab Republic, said that Mauritania's proposals were "unacceptable." In line with French thinking, the Mauritanians seem to have suggested conceding the Polisario a role in Novakchott's share of the Western Sahara or some form of federated state. The independence movement says it wants all of the former Spanish Sahara.

ize and strengthen its army."
Other diplomatic accounts est that the cease-fire has had a debilitating effect on the morale of the Mauritanian Army, which bal-looned from 2,000 to 14,000 men in only five years and consumes 65 percent of the national budget. "One thing sure is that, alas, the Mauritanian Army has been weak-ened, demobilized," an informed French diplomat said. "It seems that there has been a lot of fraternization with the Polisario, and it seems impossible that they will go back to war. If the Polisario goes on the offensive, one wonders what it will find in front of them." Before the cease-fire, the brunt of the fighting in the Mauritanian Sahara was assumed by 10,000

Perhaps sensing that events are moving in its favor, Algeria has adopted a new, conciliatory tone toward Morocco, its traditional rival in the Maghreb. party Select Committee on Science and Technology. It is up to the gov-ernment to decide whether to act

The committee's report is particularly timely because another Greek-registered tanker, the Christoe Bitas, is now floundering in heavy seas between the coasts of North Wales and Ireland.

It was carrying 35,000 tons of crude when it ran aground last week on the Hats and Barrels, a cluster of rocks outside Milford Haven. It had just left Milford Haven for Belfast.

Out of Danger

Several of its oil tanks were ruptured and the 60,000-too tanker had a dangerous list until Tuesday, by which time about 8,000 tons of oil had been pumped out of it. By last night 14,000 tons had been taken off and British officials said the vessel was probably out of danger unless a severe gale sprang up. There has been some pollution of Welsh resort beaches, although the main victims thus far of the spilled oil have been sea birds.

The dispute here is over the standards of seamanship on the tanker. British officials will not unofficial rumbles are heard about messages from the shore being misunderstood: offers of assistance being refused and other worrying aspects, including how the tanker was refloated on a falling tide.

Yesterday's report on last May's disaster said there was virtually no effective detergent against the heavy fuel oil that the Eleni V was carrying. It said that no preparations had been made to deal with beavy fuel oil, as against crude oil, and this was "a serious omission."

Of the general problem around the coasts of Britain, the report said the government's "preparations in the channel bear no relation to the likely size of any oil pollution incident and leave the south coast virmally unprotected."

At Last, the Energy Bill

Finally, it's passed. After 18 months of the most dramatic and tortuous legislative politics, President Carter's energy bill is back where it started from, on his desk. That is the great overshadowing accomplishment of the 95th Congress. The Senate finally wore down a few members' campaign of delay and finished work on the weekend. The House took it up, discussed it for four hours, and voted just before dawn on the last day of the session. But the bill returns to Mr. Carter in very different form that he wrote it. Exactly what has been achieved in this long and wearing struggle?

The real effect of this bill will lie far beyond the endless statistical quarrels over how many barrels of oil it may save. The bill seals into law and national policy a conviction that has been spreading through this country ever since the Arab oil embargo five years ago. It is the conviction — contrary to old and deeply engrained U.S. ways of thinking — that, regarding energy, more is not necessarily better. It follows that cheaper is not necessarily better, either. You can see why this legislation was fought to the last ditch by large and loud segments of the oil and gas industry, in an involuntary alliance with most of the old-line consumers' organiza-

In retrospect, it's clear that the bill was drafted too fast and tried to cover too much. But the central principle was the right one that it takes higher prices to enforce the kind of serious conservation now essential to protect the U.S. economy from further shortages and crisis. To avoid windfall profits, the prices were to be raised by taxes. To avoid enriching the U.S. Treasury, those taxes were to be rebated directly to the public. The original bill contained four separate systems of tax and rebate, all of them hideously complicated. Congress didn't like the idea. The first, the gasoline tax, sank without a sound in the House. The other three - on crude oil, on industrial use of gas and oil, and on inefficient cars - wasted slowly away in the Senate. The only survivor is a vestigial tax on automobiles with grossly poor fuel efficiency,

Congress chose to rely mainly on the instruments that it knows and likes best: regulation and tax subsidies. It voted to let the price of natural gas rise gradually toward complete decontrol in the middle or latter 1980s. That would end the absurd practice of keeping gas, the cleanest of fuels, cheaper than its competitor, oil. This reversal of the past two decades' regulatory practice was the greatest threat to final passage of the bill. But in the end Congress accepted the view that prices have to reflect scarcity, not wishful thinking.

As for oil prices, it's worth noting that Congress has not voted to keep holding them down. It merely chose not to take the initiative, itself, in raising them. Mr. Carter has promised to raise oil prices to world levels within the next two years and, under previous legislation, he has broad power to do it. Going to world level would mean a price increase of 12 cents a gallon for oil products, plus whatever OPEC chooses to add.

The benefits of this legislation will not be measured by any immediate arithmetical effects on oil imports. The achievement here is that the bill moves U.S. policy closer to the realities of a world in which oil and gas are going to be scarce. The bill advances the national commitment to conserve. For the first time, Congress has dealt with the country's. three major fuels — oil, gas and coal — together, in the knowledge that the price and availability of each have impacts on the others. True, the bill is battered and dented and stripped not only of its bubcaps but also some of the parts that the designers originally considered essential. The country is in the process of changing its mind, and that is never a tidy or orderly process. The bill will be historically important, we suspect, not for any theoretical symmetry or intellectual beauty, but because it represents a turning point in that way that Americans think about fuel and energy.

Sadat's Separate Peace

If there had been any doubt that Egyptian President Anwar Sadat intended to make a separate peace with Israel, it's gone. For the time being at least, the Egyptian-led pan-Arabism championed by Sadat's predecessor, Gamal Abdel Nasser, lies dead in the sand.

gyptian and Israeli negotiators meet in Washington free of the threat that the success of their efforts in writing an Egyptian-Israeli treaty will be seriously linked to a far more difficult settlement with Syria, Jordan and the Palestinians, involving the Israeli-occupied West Bank, Gaza, the Golan Heights and Jerusalem.

Because of their adamant stand against the Camp David accords, Sadat recently wrote off Syria and the Palestinians in the negotiations, saying, "I have had enough. . . they will have to go and negotiate for themselves."

This is a development of vast, historic consequence for Israel, assuring it (as much as anything can be assured in the Middle East) of national survival for the first time since its rebirth in 1947. With its greatest enemy made a friend and its southern flank secured, Israel cannot be driven into the sea by its remaining foes.

Israelis, of course, are wise to rein in their exuberance. A one-front peace is not a comprebensive peace. And though survival may no longer be at stake for Israel, the unap-peased Arabs still have it within their power to cause her unremitted agony. Millions of Palestinian Arabs, those displaced and those ruled by Israelis, remain unappeased.

There is also a larger, more immediate danger. Most Arab rulers — and Sadat is one — rule only tentatively. Sadat appears to have the backing of his people, but the dreamed glory sought in pan-Arabism survives in Egypt. Thus his future, and his peace with Israel, are not cast in bronze.

Sadat's enemies in other Arab lands are mobilizing against him and the Camp David accords at a summit meeting called for Nov. 1 by Iraq, the most irreconcilable of Israel's foes. Seventeen Arab countries and the Palestine Liberation Organization have agreed to attend, including Syria, which deplores Iraq barely less than Israel itself.

So, while Israel may breathe easier, it can't breathe easy, not yet. - From the Chicago Sun-Times.

Nimble Footwork in Ouebec

Premier Rene Levesque's nimble parliamentary footwork over the independence referendum in Quebec should't lull Canadians into thinking the Parti Quebecois is dropping its separatist platform.

It can't do that without abandoning the basic reason for its existence as a political movement and probably breaking up.

But there is hope for Canada in the evident difficulty Levesque is having in squaring his political fantasy of "sovereignty-association" with the political facts of life, both in Quebec and the rest of Canada.

An opening is beginning to appear for a positive Canadian reply to Levesque's separatism which can show Quebec that the answer to its discontent with confederation isn't simply to quit and go its own way.

Levesque's statements last week in the Quebec National Assembly were full of contradictions and doubtful assumptions. For example, he declared that in an independent Quebec only its own legislation would apply and only its own government would have power to levy taxes. But he expected to have a common currency and "a joint central bank" with the rest of Canada.

Does he really think Canadians would ever give a separate regime in Quebec an equal voice in determining monetary policy for the whole territory?

Similarly he assumes there would be a customs union, meaning that tariff policies would be set for Quebec and Canada as a whole. But present tariffs favor Quebec manufacturing industry, particularly in textiles and clothing, at considerable expense to Canadian consumers.

Does Levesque think Canadians would be willing to go on paying this subsidy to industry in an independent Ouebec?

If he does, most Quebeckers are much too realistic to believe him ...

WASHINGTON — The marriage of convenience be-tween Jimmy Carter and the Re-publican Party is developing into a pattern of sorts on Capitol Hill. The result has been a collection of Carter victories in Congress that have turned on vital GOP support. It is a support based less on the appeal of the Democratic president, however, than on the broader underlying Republican interest in the strength of the presidency itself. On most issues united minority opposition to Carter has been the rule; combined with the typical Democratic divisions on the Hill, the result has been a coalition to block presidential initiatives and to stifle presidential desires. But consider the issues where Republicans have rallied behind the president.

On the three ootable Carter foreign-policy successes in Congress—arms sales to the Saudis, the Panama Canal Treaty and an end to the Turkish arms embargo—it was strong support from the GOP that provided the difference. Resublications also elimbad over Damopublicans also climbed over Democrats to heap praise on the presi-dent for handling of the Camp Da-vid summit, and the GOP has provided vital backing for the Carter position on several other recent issues of note.

Deep Divisions

On civil-service reform for example, the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee were characterized by deep divisions and frequently bitter opposition among Carter's plan, with Republicans interceding time and again to preserve the essential elements of the Carter reorganization. That pattern subsequently was repeated on the House floor.

Similarly, the House Commerce Investigations subcommittee's recent action in citing Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano for cootempt of Congress — a terrible embarrassment to the administratioo - was adopted hy a one-vote margin in spite of strong Republican efforts to spare

Just a week ago, in Carter's most publicized domestic confrontation with Congress, Republican votes provided the margin of difference in sustaining his veto of the public-works bill; indeed, as great a proportion of Republicans as of Democrats supported the Democratic

It is easy to understand why Republicans, in a tiny minority in both houses of Congress and with-out control of the White House. would provide consistent opposiwould provide consistent opposa-tion to the proposals sent to a Democratic Congress by a Demo-cratic president. But wby these in-stances where Republicans have conspicuously stepped in to save Carter, to praise him or to spare him an embarrassing defeat that his fellow Democrats were all willing to inflict? The answer is seen, I think, in the issues where the GOP has thrown its support to the Democrat in the White House — and in a broader sense by a very pragmatic calculation on the part of the minority party.

Foreign policy, civil-service reform, citing a Cabinet member for contempt — all are issues that touched directly on the broad question of presidential prerogatives. and power. Whenever an issue has come up that reflects upon the presidency itself, the Republicans forget their knee-jerk opposition to a Democratic president and rally its sufficient numbers to protect presidential prerogatives and dignity. Democrats in Congress, on the other hand, now view these issues automatically in terms of congressional prerogatives, and so are much less reliable or consistent in support of their party colleague who now occupies the presidency. To some extent, what we have here is a different reaction, to or learning experience from, Watergate and the turmoil of the past decade. To Republicans, Watergate (broadly defined) was not seen as a telling or generalizable example of presidential power run rampant; most were not very upset either by a secret bombing of Cambodia that they thought a sound policy decision, or by other recent instances of abuse in the executive branch.

litical power in the United States lie in the White House, and over the long run a strong presidency means more Republican influence over the direction policy takes in the United States. This point was raised by conservative Republican theorist Jeffrey Hart in a National Review article several years ago, and it appears that congressional Republicans are taking his advice.

For Carter, then, it is clear that ideological sympathies with the management side. (Civil-service reform, for example, is seen as a classic labor-management issue.) Liberal Democrats, on the other hand, reacted to the events of Watergate with the emotion of the betrayed true believer. They had the more issues he is able to frame in terms of presidential preroga-tives, the more he can count on the Republican support that is essen-tial to his success on legislative ini-tiatives. In so doing, however, he raises a red flag in front of his felbeen the champions of the strong presidency as their main hope in the 1950s and 1960s, when they were a distinct minority in Congress. But these days any president, Democrat or Republican, is viewed with suspicion by this group, now low Democrats, which has repercussions in other policy areas. And when the issue is a policy one and not a presidency one, the Republi-cans are likely to revert to their the majority of their party.

Beyood these party differences in reaction to the numoil and scandal of the past few years, there is a more important reason behind

GOP reinforcement of Carter's opposition. Over the past three decades Republicans have controlled Congress for only two years, while they have held the White House for 16 years. policy questions. In the former area, the president has a chance at Republicans have not held a majorleast to forge a bipartisan majority, ity in either house of Congress if not a consensus, and to have his way; in the latter he is likely to en-counter unified GOP hostility and since 1954, and they have little chance of gaining majority status in either the House or the Senate in the foreseeable future. But they gave up the White House, narrowly and reluctantly, only two years ago, and they have hopes of regaining it Democratic divisions, adding up to disaster. This post-Franco, pre-constitutional Spain is full of surprises, particularly for anyone who knew the Spain that went before it, some of them almost surrealistic: for instance, the applause of Madrid first-nighters watching a new film starring Spanish sex symbol Susana Estrada.

The applanse was not for her. It was for the gray-uniformed security police who rush in at the end — oo the screen that is — to break up an orgy represented by a heaving mass of human flesh, with frequent cuts to Miss Estrada's somewhat pendulous breasts. The movie was so boring that the raid was a welcome finale. Warnke Pulled, Not Pushed

By Joseph Kraft

WASHINGTON — The word is around that Paul Warnke has been forced out as disarmament oegotiator to smooth Senate passage of a new Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty. In fact, Mr. Warnke was pulled, not pushed.

He is leaving the government for family reasons and because his law firm has an immediate and imperative need for his services. Clearing the record is important in part to do justice to a distinguished public servant, but even more to point up the critical role the director of the Disarmament Agency has come to play in shaping both defense policy and U.S. relations with the Soviet

Before going any further, I should say a personal word. I have known Warnke more than 25 years. I have admired him at all times as a person of high intellectual acumen and personal integrity.

Clarity

Unlike-his detractors, who spe-cialized in obfuscation, he can dis-cuss the abstruse with well-nigh miraculous clarity and concision. He stood out as a Pentagon official in the Johnson years and as a disar-mament negotiator precisely because he said exactly what he thought — instead of what was merely politic. A mark of his honesty was his approach to the disarmament job. Warnke has three sons in college and a daughter in graduate school. Annual trition costs come to more than $25,000. The fruit of his work lies in the treaty that will probably be wrapped up this year at a summit meeting between Presidents Brezhnev and Carter. Everybody will then be able to make a judgment as to Warnke's handiwork. But in view of the accusations against him, it should be pointed out now that Secretary of Defense Harold Brown and the joint chiefs of staff support the agreement so far.

Apart from playing the lead role in negotiating an important treaty, moreover, Warnke raised the Disarmament Agency to the point where as its director he could play a major role in two forums critical for the definition of U.S. policy. He became one of the key players in the small cluster of high officials who define U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union

So Warnke was reluctant to take stan and practically everything else under the sun. He was the lop man in delinkage, and thus a force for putting Soviet-U.S. relations back into their true proportions.

Wrong As disarmament director,

Warnke also sat in on a subcom-mittee of the National Security Council, which brought together the secretary of defense and the joint chiefs in discussions about arms control. It is wrong to say that this is the forum which determines defense policy.
But the Pentagon has long since learned to run over the Bureau of the Budget and the technical ex-perts in the White House. So it is noi wrong to say that the arms con-trol subcommittee provided the only forum where defense policy was subject to serious adversary proceeding. In that sense, Warnke has been a shaper of defense policy and acted to prevent a runaway of military technology. These considerations are critical in thinking about a successor to Warnke. For the right choice is not a military man with a chest full of ribbons who can snow the Senate on the upcoming treaty. The right person needs to have varsity stature in all aspects of foreign and defense policy. The task is not to bamboo-de the Senate; it is to render, as Warnke so preeminently did, some service to the state.

Such abrupt changes in Spanish society, and the tensions created by them, heighten the sense of impermanence and instability felt by many Spaniards in this period of transition from an autocratic to a democratic system.

A diverting feature in the current festival has been the presence of the Bath Natural Theater Company, which parades the streets and attracts attention by stopping traffic and enlisting a vast crowd of followers. Dressed in striking finery and sporting white kid gloves, these seven engaging zanies gather at a street corner, each carrying a yellow suitcase. They ask passersby for directions to "the station," and they invade clubs, tea-shops and hotel lobbies with their showy luggage as they shout out instructions to one another and apologize loudly for their intrusions and mistakes. They have been welcome visitors in Dublin.

Subscribing to Magazines Soviet Style

MOSCOW — It's probably too late to subscribe to Foreign Literature or New World magazine for 1979, but you no doubt can get on the list for Political Self-Education or even Communist.

Such are the pickings as the average Soviet citizen tries to choose from about 175 national and republic newspapers and nearly 1,000 major magazines this fall. It is the annual ritual of signing up for next year's offerings from this country's government-controlled press.
It takes a combination of luck,

"Some people try to subscribe to more magazines than they can read," complained Leonid Barashenkov, head of the Ministry of Communications' department for distribution of newspapers and magazines. "They're doing it sim-ply out of babit."

Official Reason

Officially, the government com-plains that a lack of paper prevents it from printing all the copies of newspapers and magazines that people want.

"Please, please," Barashenkov pleaded in an interview with the government newspapeer Izvestia, remember that you should con-serve paper, becase every ton of paper you save gives a chance for 400 more people to subscribe."

But some here suspect that another reason is that the government's publishing arm loses vast amounts of money. Subscription rates are low - 365 issues of the Communist newspaper Fravda, for example, cost less than $11; a year's subscription to the popular magazine Woman Worker costs $2.73. Advertising appears in only a few newspapers, and even then it

Barashenkov hinted at the problem in his Izvestia interview, complaining that the cost of delivering Moscow-printed magazines to outlying cities is sometimes more than the cost of the magazine itself.

"It means maybe they will increase the price of magazines sent to other cities," said a Muscovite used to reading between the lines of Tamara Guseva, head of the fifth-floor office the other day. Soyuzpechat subscription depart-ment, said that about 95 per cent of Soviet newspaper and magazine cir-culation lies in subscriptions and only 5 percent newsstand sales.

It all means that the typical Ivan Ivanovich has to take the initiative, and the time to do so is every September, October and November, when the following year's subscriptions go on sale at the various Soyuzpechat offices. Very few cars deserve the title "sports car". The new BMW M 1 is one of the exceptions - it's sports car built, developed and designed for the conditions of production car racing, and it proves that fact in both its performance and the advanced technology of its engineering.

In accordance with international motor racing regulations, the M 1 is equipped with a 3.5 litre power unit developing either 588 DIN kW (800 bhp) or 349 DIN kW (470 bhp) - the standardproduction version develops 204 DIN kW (277 bhp). The new BMW 635 CSi coupé has been designed for another purpose. But it is still just as consistent in reaching its overall objective.

For the ambitious driver the BMW 635 CSi thus represents the ideal solution between the comfortable sportiness of a BMW saloon and the extreme racing standards of the BMW M 1.

The 3.5 litre 160 DIN kW (218 bhp) power unit of the new BMW 635 CSi has been developed out of the same basic block as the three M 1 engine versions.

Thanks to a special system of improved performance, higher torque, careful chassis modifications, and aerodynamic streamlining, the new BMW 635 CSi excels with driving characteristics more reminiscent of competition cars than those of standard-production automobiles.

The BMW range of fine automobiles: the ultimate in performance, comfort and safety. Designed for the man who appreciates the excitement of driving.

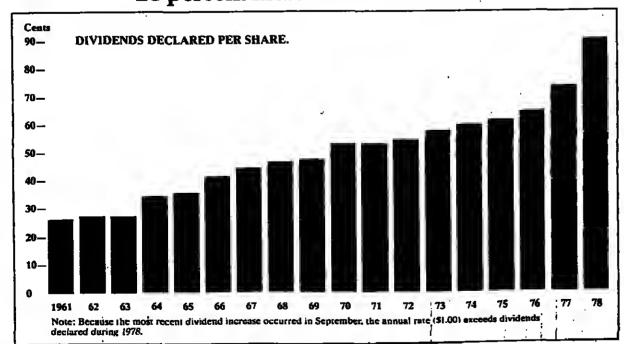

BMW - Sheer driving pleasure

U.S. Says Foreigners Hold Paper

But Sees Decrease In OPEC Buying

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19 (Reuters) — There apparently was no appreciable change in foreign holdings of U.S. Treasury securities in the third quarter, Treasury un-dersecretary Anthony Solomon said today.

He said foreign boldings of these securides rose $15 billion in the first quarter due in large part to foreign-exchange market interven-tion. The stabilization of the dollar in the second quarter reversed that trend and foreign holdings fell $5 billion, he said.

"We do not yet have a complete picture of the third quarter, but it appears that there was no appreci-able change in foreign holdings of Treasury securities," he said in a speech before the Public Securities Association in Marco Island, Fla.

He said part of the decreased for-eign interest in U.S. securities is the dwindling investible surplus of members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. He estimated the surplus for this year at half of last year's $34 billion and said the surplus could decline by as much as another $10 billion for

Small OPEC Investment

"If our projections are in the right range, new OPEC discretionary investment in the United States or any other market — are likely to be quite small," he said.

He also said the Treasury is coo-cerned that futures markets in U.S. coupon securites, bonds and notes, "may do more harm than good from the standpoint of the efficient financing of the public debt." How-ever, be said, "we have not found sufficient cause to recommend sus-pension of trading in existing contracts or disapproval of new contract designations,"

"The Treasury would certainly welcome the establishment of futures markets in coupon securities if we felt that these markets would benefit Treasury financing," he said. But he had said earlier in the speech that "we have carefully monitored developments in the bill futures market since its establishment in 1976, and we have oot seen any evidence that this market has benefited the Treasury."

He added that the Treasury is more concerned with the coupoo out that under floating exchange futures market than the bill market.

In another development, the Treasury said in a statement that it intends to seek rapid extension of legislation extending a waiver of countervailing duties on several products and to make the extension retroactive.

It said it expects Congress to make the extension retroactive to Jan. 3, even though legislation can-not be submitted until Jan. 15, when the next Congress convenes.

U.S. Oil Imports Off 11.8% So Far in '78

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19 (Reuters) — U.S. petroleum imports, excluding strategic reserves, during the first three quar-ters of the year were off 11.8 percent from a year earlier at an average 7.8 million barrels daily, the American Petroleum Institute, a trade group, reports. However, the API said in recent 15.9 percent over the year-earlier period, to 3.18 million units. In Angust alone, bowever, the year-to-year growth rate was only 1.5 per-cent, primarily because of lower U.S. sales.

Robust Domestic Sales

According to industry analysts, Japanese antomakers now are shifting their battleground to the home market, in which nearly all the auto companies are enjoying robust sales. Industry leader Toyota sold 1,083,894 anios in the first nine months of this year, up 14.5 per-cent from a year earlier. Total industry production in 1977 was a record 8.5 million units, including

Auto experts here attribute the brisk domestic sales to several factors: the pickup in replacement orders, previously delayed by the economic shump; a wide variety of model changes attracting costomers with better mileage; and improved drivability and the completion of model changes related to controls on exhaust emissions.

In addition, the auto companies have launched vigorous domestic sales efforts.

Some automakers have allowed substantial price discounts. One only 2.2 percent in coming years.

Toyota salesman, for example, says that each salesman at his dealership can offer discounts ranging from $313 to $365 a car. If the customer switches to a Toyota product from a competitor's, he says, the discounts could be much larger.

Profit Margins Hurt

Some dealers are worried that such discounts will hart their profits. One industry official suggests that some dealers try to compensate for the large discounts by making profits from the interest pay-ments on installment plans. Currently, buyers are charged 16.5 percent annual interest on a 24-month installment purchase plan, a rate much higher than that paid by dealers to their commercial creditors. Customers have caught on to this tactic and have begun paying cash. Uotil recently, only about 40 percent of auto purchases were made in cash, but analysts say the ratio has risen to about 60 percent as customers borrow from banks at low interest rates and settle deals in cash.

The intense domestic sales pitches have resulted in more car purchases and the competition is likely to intensify as the Japanese market approaches a saturation point. The Industrial Structure Council, which advises the Minister of International Trade and Industry, predicts that Japan's auto demand will grow at an annual rate of of stereotypes Anita Bryant and most people in the country hold about homosexuality as socially masochistic behavior. I too would be horrified if my child bewould be horrified if my child be-came a homosexual. I would do ev-erything I could to keep that terri-hle thing from happening." The words were spoken by Alan Bell, psychologist, humanist, Episcopali-an minister (formerly), sex researcher (currently) and co-au-thor with Martin Weinberg of a major study that should help to erode the popular image of homo-sexuals as necessarily maladjusted, miserahle, unstahle, self-hating, so-cial and psychological misfits. To be sure, some homosexuals

To be sure, some homosexuals are highly maladapted folk, hut so are some heterosexuals. Shall we say that attraction to the opposite sex causes a heterosexual's misery the way we are quick to assume that same-sex attraction breeds a homosexual's self-contempt? Bell and Weinberg suggest that such correlations do not always, or even usually, imply cause and effect. that the causes of human miseries are not so simplistic or easy to

Bell and Weinberg are researchers at the renowned Institute for Sex Research at Indiana University, the respectable base from which the late Dr. Alfred Kinsey began his myth-exploding studies of human sexuality. Their intensive study of 979 free-living homosexual men and women residing in the San men and women residing in the San Francisco Bay Area represents the most comprehensive look yet taken at a phenomenon that has long been the object of psychoanalytic derision, public persecution and private disgust.

All Kinds At last, someone has bothered to derive notions about the psychological and social concomitants of homosexuality not from patients in psychotherapy or prison inmates or small unrepresentative groups, but rather from large numbers of "normal" people living and working in the world the way "normal" heterosexuals supposedly do. The findings of this broad study ("Homosexualities" is the second of three volumes: the first was a summary of the scientific literature on the subject; the third, to be published next year, will discuss the etiology of same-sex attraction) reveal that there are all kinds of homosexuals, just as there are all kinds of heterosexuals. There are happy, stable, professionally and socially successful ones living as comples in marriages-without-license; there are couples, also happy, who have "extramarital" sexual interests; there are footloose, promiscuous homosexuals not unlike swinging singles, also mostly hap-py; there are highly promiscuous tortured souls with poor self-imag-es, and there are reclusive types who have hittle sexual or social interaction. There are undoubtedly other gradations of psychosocial adjustment, the authors surmise, but the above types screamed out gathered. "It's clear that you can't lump all homosexuals into a barrel, any more than you can lump all hetero-sexuals together," says Bell. The study "amply demonstrates that relatively few homosexual men and women conform to the hideous stereotype most people have of them," Bell and Weinberg con-clude. Why, then, do so many people react to homosexuality as a homogeneous phenomenon to be despised and suppressed even to the extent of denying perhaps 10 percent of the population its guar antee of civil rights? Is it because homosexuals have apparently forfeited the masculini ry and femininity that heterosexu als are so fearful of losing and mus struggle so hard to maintain? Is because homosexuality defies t authority of God and the Bible. because homosexuality defies the authority of God and the Bible. 54, it because homosexuals don't have in children and therefore "sinfully bree pursue sex not for reproduction ht isis for its own rewards? Is it because o 'es. jealousy over the filmsy ries that two bind homosexual couples and their id presumed easy access to frequent at sexual encounters with a wide variety of partners?

Food for Thought

Whatever the reasons, the homo-sexualities study will provide plenty of food for thoughtful people in schools, churches, legislatures, therapeutic settings, and society at large. It will also undouhtedly spark many a controversial dia-logue. Okay, some will prohably say, so homosexuality is not necessay, so homosexualty is not neceses arily had, but does that mean it is a good? Does that mean our society e should encourage its expression? The debate can be expected to intensify as more cities consider ordinances banning discrimination on a the hasis of sexual preference. This is the consider of the part of the consider of the hasis of sexual preference. ty-one cities and four counties have already passed such laws. And three cities and one county have rescinded them

The study findings may also encourage a look at the reasons for the widespread instability in homesexual relationships. Lacking any sort of institutional or social support for their coupling, homosexual men and women have little to hold them together over the rough spots. Many of the men and women in the Bell-Weinberg study reported deepseated unhappiness and lasting feelings of loss over broken relationships. In fact, this was the mo-common reason that homosexualcontemplated or attempted suicide. The authors caution readers against judging homosexuals hy standards of behavior that apply primarily to heterosexuals, because the "life-enhancing mechanisms" used by the two groups are necessarily differ-

There will undoubtedly also be argument over the conclusions Bell and Weinberg draw from their data. Is the optimistic view they present really justified, or is it merely in reaction to the bleak picture painted by society in general? Are they laying too much of the blame for homosexual unhappiness on the restrictions and contempt society has imposed? As Bell himself points out, "It's difficult to keep oneself totally objective in a study like this. The findings are such an antidote to what's come down the pike until now that it's possible we've presented too rosy a

U.S.Professor Wants to Add Romance to 3Rs

PLATTEVILLE, Wis., Oct. 19 (AP) — Sociology professor Ray Short says first marriages have only a 50-50 success rate these days because too many people are saying "I do" when really they don't.

But Short, who teaches a "mas-riage and family" course at the University of Wisconsin-Platteville, says there's a way to beat the odds and significantly diminish the chances of divorce or separation.

"You can't just think you're in love," said Short, who frequently

Forest Beats A.E.K. Athens

ATHENS, Oct. 19 (Renters) — Nottingham Forest, the surprise conqueror of European Cup holder Liverpool in the first round, last night boosted its chances of reaching the quarterfinals of the cup competition with a 2-1 victory over Greek champion A.E.K. Athens.

Forest's victory over English soccer rival Liverpool was one of many early shocks in Europe's major club competition, but Forest proved it was no fluke with a fine display in Athens. Capt. John McGovern gave the English champions an early lead and Scottish international Kenny Birtles made it 2-0 before halftime. A.E.K. was sent off goalles in the first half but pulled one back with a penalty from midfield star Tassos in the second.

It was another busy night in Europe, with 62 clubs hattling in second-round, first-leg European Cup, Cup Winners' Cup and UEFA Cup matches.

Dutch champion PSV Eindhoven survived a lucky escape in the opening minute with Glasgow Rangers when Alec Forsyth shot wide with only goalkeeper Tonnic Van Engele. Eindhoven defended superbly for the rest of the European Cup match to grab a reserved goalless draw.

Sweden's Malmoe, which put out French champion Monaco in the first round, pulled off an excellent 0-0 away draw against Dinad Kiev in the European Cup, while Cologne of West Germany went one better with a fine 1-0 victory in Bulgaria against Lokomotiv Solia.

International defender Herbert Zimmermann broke the deadlock in the second half to put Cologne in with an excellent chance of reaching the last eight.

The second-leg matches will be played on Nov. 1.

East European rivals Zbrojovka

A couple of goals from Van Der Elst inspired Anderlecht of Belgi-um, the Cup Winners' Cup holder, to a 3-0 home victory over talented Barcelona. Anderlecht, which had a first-round bye, shackled Barcelona ACF and striker Hans Krankl and had their 26,000 home supporters in Brussels cheering wildly as they piled on the pressure in the second half.

NASL Players May Strike If Owners Refuse to Talk

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19 (AP) — There is a possibility of a strike against the North American Soccer League next spring unless the club owners open negotiations on a collective bargaining agreement, the players union says.

If there is a strike, the union will fight through the Immigration and Naturalization Service any attempt by the 24 NASL clobs to import foreign players as replacements.

Ed Garvey, staff director of the NASL Players Association, accused the owners of defying a Sept. 1 or-der by the National Labor Relations Board certifying the union as the collective bargaining agent for the players.

Garvey said that the owners have refused to begin collective bargain-ing. "The NASL Players Association has made repeated attempts to begin discussions with Commis-sioner Phil Woosnam and the owners on a collective bargaining agree-ment," Garvey said. "Those requests were answered with silence until last week when league counsel Robert Rolnick indicated by letter that the owners were going to defy

Russell, with his 11 base hits, may be excused, but those two August fighters - Steve Garvey and Don Sutton — again have black eyes. Garvey (.208) went without an RBL and has only four in the Dodgers' three losing Series in the last five years. Sutton, previ-ously distinguished in postseason,

Tentmaking: A Collapsing Craft——— PEOPLE: U.S. Women's Team

By Don A. Schanche

CAIRO — Omar Khayyam is alive but not well, and is working only part-time at his dying craft on Cairo's street of the

His name is Mohammed Omar, and he was a fine artisan, hut now he comes only occasionally to work on Khayyamer Street. No one knows his age, but he is so old that his eyes are too weak for threading the needle.

"Like the rest of us — and our art — he is dying," said Salah Eldin Mahmoud, one of the last of the craftsmen whose forehears for thousands of years embellished Egypt and the Middle East with exquisitely designed tenting.

From the earliest intact tombs of the pharaohs to the newest Marriott Hotel in Riyadh, the painstakingly appliqued Egyptian tent material, with its brilliant colors and dazzling patterns, has been the region's main aesthetic relief from desert drabness.

Tutankhamen's treasure included samples of the delicately wrought work. The tomh of the 21st Dynasty Princess Isimkheb (B.C. 1000) sheltered an entire tent with multicolored stars appliqued to its sky-blue ceiling. Red and black checkerboard squares, broken by colorful animals and flowers, covered its incide walls.

During the time of Omar Khayyam, the ancient poet and mathematician who almost a thousand years ago took his nom de plume from his father Ibrahim's trade, only his native Persia rivaled Egypt in tentmaking artistry and skill. Both influenced European art and design.

Pavilions

Today almost any celebration in the Arab world, from birthdays and weddings to funerals, is an occasion to erect pavilions draped with yards of canvas-hacked material.

President Anwar Sadat, in his open limousine, passed beneath scores of tented archways on his return from Camp David; he arrived at his Nile-side home for his son's wedding, which was performed under a vast tented canopy on the front lawn.

Yet the artisans of Khayyam Street, a narrow dirt thoroughfare in old Cairo that has been darkened for centuries by a decaying wooden arcade, are moving away for lack of work.

Instead of apprenticing their sons to the needle at the traditional age of 6, they are sending them to school, hoping they will hecome office workers, engineers or doctors.

The lofts where more than 1,000 skilled men once labored darring invisible stitches through precisely patterned bits of colored cloth — have been converted into overcrowded dwellings.

"There are only a dozen true artisans left and only four or five of them are really good," said Hanafy Mohammed Ibrahim, 56, who has worked for half a century in a tentmaking shop that his family has owned for 300 years.

"It is the textile mills that are killing us," he lamented. "They steal our designs, copy the colors and run off imitation print material as yard goods. To cut and applique a three-hy-six-yard panel of good arabesque design takes one of us at least a month of hard work. The mills can print an imitation in a second."

One palatial tent. . . was so huge and complex that it took 150 artisans nine years to make it.'

Like his colleagues on Khayyam Street, Ibrahim has been reduced to sewing trivial foot-square patches and small wall hangings, depicting overworked pharaonie tomb scenes or fragments of arabesque patterns, for sale to tourists. Each sale brings a profit of about 35 cents, but he said he feels lucky when he can sell five of the patches a day.

Ihrahim had just completed what he feared may be the last great tenting order of his career: six brightly appliqued drapes of 20 square yards apiece that took him and 12 assistants four morths to sear Feels of the fine tritched mierce was completely.

months to sew. Each of the fine-stitched pieces was completely covered with complex arabesque designs that, through repetition, formed grander designs that themselves were repeated. The fine cotton eloths of vibrant reds, hiues, yellows and other colors used in the applique had to be imported from the United States, at the purchaser's expense, because none as good was available in Egypt.

The order, worth almost $4,000 (before costs) to Ibrahim, was so precious that he flew personally with it to Riyadh to deliver and hang the tenting himself — in the new Marriott Hotel. But he conceded that even such a large order is a far cry from the old days, when his father first sat him cross-legged on the family shop's low, stage-like tailor's bench and began showing him how to handle scissors, needle and thread. "We would still work occasionally on an entire big tent, com-pletely decorated," he recalled. "But even then it was nothing like the tents of the old times. They were palaces, truly."

Egypt's only recent scholar of tentmaking, Soraya Abdel Rasoul; confirmed that the Arab tents of old indeed were portable palaces, encompassing reception halls, private apartments - even fixtured hathrooms.

Rasoul, an artist and art historian who lamented the rapid decline of the tentmakers in her doctoral thesis last year, said the Arab leaders of the Fazimid dynasty 1,000 years ago often needed more than 100 camels just to carry their tenting. The tents were their homes when they settled and their homes when they traveled, she said, and they used every possible artistic technique to decorate them.

"One palatial tent during the period was so huge and complex that it took 150 artisans nine years to make it," she said. Origin of Cairo

According to Rasoul, the tent was so prominent in early Islamic life that the original Nile village that became Cairo took its earliest name — Fustaat — from one.

Fustaat in classical Arabic meant tent, or camp of tents, and when the leader of the Arah invaders, Amr ihn al-As, conquered Egypt in 632 A.D. he pitched his fustaat on the sands of what is now southeast Cairo. Ready to push on to Alexandria, he ordered the tents struck, but the work halted when his men found a nesting dove incubating her eggs atop the Islamic warrior's main shel-

Rather than disturb the dove, the leader ordered that the tent be left standing, and until Cairo began to grow and took its present name more than 300 years later, the capital of Egypt was known throughout the Arab world as Fustaat.

Today the few remaining artists among the tentmakers, such as Ibrahim, Mahmoud and 70-year-old master designer Hanafy Arafa, concede that the craft is literally dying.

Within less than a generation, according to Mahmoud and the others, the last of the tentmakers will die on Khayyam Street and, although the content of the tentmakers will die on Khayyam Street and.

although examples of their work may live on for hundreds of years, there will be no subsequent specimens of tentmaking splen-

Four women braved violent snowstorms and avalanches to become the first all-female climbing team to conquer 26,508-foot Anna-purna in the Himalayas. The team reached the top of the main peak Sunday, the Nepal Tourism Minis-try said. Climber Blum said her group had challenged Annapur-na hecause "it gives women a chance to climb. It's hard for women to have a chance for decision-making." Beneath their parkas, the climbers had worn T-shirts bearing the slogan "A Woman's Place is on Top."

Prince Charles left a charity show in Frimley Green, a small vil-lage south of London early and angry after a noisy section of the au-dience heckled some of the black stars, including American Billy Daniels. The charity show, hilled as the first all-black royal variety per-formance, raised £13,300 (about $26,000) in aid of the British Olympic ski team. The rowdy section of the audience also heckled British singer Madeline Bell, reputed to be Prince Charles' favorite.

Some thought it was gunfire and some might have mistaken it for a passage from the 1812 Overture, but the barrage of sounds that resounded through Carnegie Hall Wednesday might definitely did not belong in the middle of Tchaikov-sky's Fourth Symphony, "About a third of the audience leaped out of their seats and started ronning out of the auditorium," said Peter Gelb, spokesman for the Boston
